CABA ENDORSES NET-ATHOME2007 CONFERENCE

February 26, 2007

The Continental Automated Buildings Association (CABA) is pleased to announce its endorsement of the Net-atHome2007 Conference. The event is to be held Nov. 13-15, 2007 at Boscolo Plaza Hotel in Nice, France.

Net-atHome is an annual industry forum organized by Omega Research, a marketing and technology firm based in Sophia Antipolis, France specializing in residential technologies.

The event focuses on products and services taking advantage of: home networking solutions, such as "home gateways" connecting the home communication infrastructure to external access networks; thus providing consumers with more attractive functionalities and services for the widest range of applications, including comfort, entertainment, remote control, security, energy management, automation, and working from home.

"As a organization whose raison d'être is the promotion of home networking and automation technologies, CABA strongly supports and endorses the Net-atHome Conference," states Ronald J. Zimmer, CABA President & CEO.

With more than 170 to 300 key industry representatives from 25 different countries projected to go to the show, attendees will learn about various home networking trends and issues from global communication infrastructures to killer applications, and working business models to market-enabling industry standards.

"We are pleased that CABA has endorsed our conference," states Karine Valin, Managing Director, Omega Research. "CABA's endorsement is a seal of approval indicating that our international event is of the highest quality in terms of attendee and exhibitor satisfaction."
